John Siegfried was in the Continental Army, knew George Washington, fought in some battles, and left the army with the rank of Colonel. (More information concerning his military record can be obtained from books in local libraries, i.e., local to Northampton, Pa.). In 1914, the people of Northampton placed a marble monument containing a bronze plaque in his bonor at the site of the covered over Mennonite Cemetery on the south side of W. 21* St.. Two headstones, those of Jacob Baer and Col. John Siegfried, were removed, the other stones laid down and covered with fill, then these two stones were replaced. An iron fence replaced the stone wall in1885, but this also is gone and the plot containing the monument and the two headstones is now surrounded by a single chain. (I wish I knew more of the history of this cemetery, some say there's about 100 graves here, but like I said, "there's a time to search and a time to write".) Oops!!!! I strayed a little bit, lets get back on track and show you the plaque.

On 10 Jun 1793, Col. John Siegfried and neighbors Michael Bieber and Abraham Levan each sold a small plot of land where their properties intersected. (each receiving 5 Shillings), which totaled 123½, perches, in trust to Henry Boyl and Peter Butz "...to and for the only use of the Christian Inhabitants and Repholders residing within Allen Township in the county of Northampton aforesaid for the purpose of maintaining a schoolhouse thereon for the education of their youth ...". (Easton, Deed book F, vol.4, p. 184). A log school house was built, but it is not known if Col. John saw the school's completion since he died 27 Nov.1793. The log structure was replaced with a brick building in 1847 and this replaced with a larger building in 1874. At this time, the school grounds covered only 26 perches. The school was called "The Levan School" and was sold and turned into a private home in 1904. The building still exists on the corner of 23° St. and Dewey Ave. and is the home of a sweet lady, Mrs. Julia (Cancarz) Rosko, who was born in this building in 1913. The uniqueness of this school tract helps to better locate Col. John's property as it relates to present day Northampton Borough.
